NOTES ON CONTRIBUTORS

Fiona Brettel is an PhD student at the Institute of Education, with particular interests in the work of Simone Weil and Martin Heidegger, especially with regard to how these thinkers could help illuminate what it might mean to understand and teach art. She works in the printmaking department at Morley College and is a practising artist.

Jan Derry is Senior Lecturer in Philosophy of Education at the Institute of Education, University of London. Her principal research interests are in: the philosophical presuppositions of the post-Vygotskian research field and their implications for theories of mind and activity; the inter-relation of pedagogy and knowledge; professional knowledge and judgment; concept development; and the philosophy of technology mediated learning. She is currently writing a book on Vygotsky and Philosophy.

Amanda Fulford is Associate Principal Lecturer at Leeds Trinity University College and a research student at the Institute of Education, University of London. Her research, which is informed by the work of Stanley Cavell, is focused on the idea of literacy, with reference to the rise and influence of New Literacy Studies.

Muna Golmohamad is a Visiting Lecturer in Education at Roehampton University, Visiting Lecturer at the College for International Citizenship in Birmingham and a research student of Philosophy of Education at the Institute of Education, University of London. Her research interest is concerned with the theme of how to educate citizens as moral agents with global concerns. She is particularly interested in conceptualizing World/Global Citizenship and a relational approach to Citizenship Education, focusing on the notion of an integrated self and an integrative principle of unity in diversity.

Yuzo Hirose is a graduate student at Kyoto University. His main research interests concern geographical education and citizenship education, which are relevant to cosmopolitanism, in the work of Immanuel Kant.

Naomi Hodgson is a doctoral student at the Institute of Education, University of London. Her research, which is informed by the work of Michel Foucault, is focussed on the role of education in the construction of European citizenship in current policy and practice.

Suzy Horton was an MA student at the Institute of Education with particular interests in contemporary education policy regarding the teaching of well-being. She has been a Primary school teacher and Senior lecturer.

Anna Kouppanou, who is from Cyprus, is a doctoral student at the Institute of Education, London, and currently a teacher of Greek. Her particular interest is in new understandings of space, in relation to the work of Martin Heidegger. She is the author of a number of works in Greek, including books for children and on special needs provision in education.

Masuo Koyasu is Professor of Psychology and Sub-Dean of the Graduate School of Education, Kyoto University. He also holds a position as the project leader of the Global COE Program Revitalizing Education for Dynamic Hearts and Minds (2007-2012). His research interests have focused upon how young children develop an understanding of other minds. His early work was concerned with children's abilities in hypothesis-testing, understanding non-literal expressions, perspective-taking, and drawing.

Duck-Joo Kwak is Associate Professor at Konkuk University in Seoul, Korea. Her research interests are, broadly speaking, ethics, philosophy of education, and teacher education. She has written numerous articles on civic and moral education from a post-liberal perspective, especially in relation to democratic citizenship in liberal Confucian culture. Her current work also focuses on the exploration of humanistic approaches to teacher education.

Michael Marshall is a lecturer in cultural theory who has taught for more than two decades in successive London art schools. As a PhD student at the Institute of Education, his research concerns the contemporary negotiation of creativity in terms of the legacy of such art schools, and conceptual models of the university that has absorbed them. His philosophical training is unorthodox in being grounded in a reading seminar which has continued uninterrupted for 21 years.

Koichiro Misawa is a graduate student at the Institute of Education. His primary research interests are in the social dimension of human knowledge and its implications for education studies as an interdisciplinary work.

Ian Munday is a lecturer in philosophy of education at the University of Cambridge and a PhD student at the Institute of Education. His research interests are in performativity and performatives, with reference to the works of J.L. Austin, Judith Butler, Stanley Cavell, Gilles Deleuze and Jacques Derrida.

Jade Nguyen is a graduate student at the Institute of Education. Her research is focused on the student-teacher relationship and how that informs the conception of the good teacher.

Junko Nishigaki is Associate Professor at the Center for Research and Development of Higher Education, Osaka City University. As this Center was established under the mission of making contributions to the education of our university, my research is related to both my own interest and the tasks that our university assigns me. I am interested in life-long development of students, and study how university learning could make a foundation of students' life-long development. I also have to conduct research investigating the assessment and evaluation of higher education because my present position covers this research. I am now trying to create a synergy between this research and my interests in development and learning.

Yuki Ohara is a Research Fellow of Japan Society for the Promotion of Science. She is in her second year of the Ph.D Course of Comparative Educational Policies at Graduate School of Education, Kyoto University. Her main research is in India's Educational System, particularly in private schools for the poor. She teaches Computer Science and Human Relations as a part-time lecturer at Osaka Ohtani University and Mimuro Nursing College.

Naoko Saito is Associate Professor in the Graduate School of Education at Kyoto University. Her primary areas of scholarship are philosophy of education and American philosophy. Her main interests are in the works of John Dewey, Ralph Waldo Emerson, Henry David Thoreau and Stanley Cavell. Her main publications include The Gleam of Light: Moral Perfectionism and Education in Dewey and Emerson (New York: Fordham University Press, 2005) and the Japanese translation of Stanley Cavell's The Senses of Walden (Tokyo: Hosei University Press, 2005).

Paul Standish is Professor of Philosophy of Education at the Institute of Education, London. His recent publications include The Therapy of Education (Basingstoke: Palgrave Macmillan), co-authored with Paul Smeyers and Richard Smith, and The Philosophy of Nurse Education (Basingstoke: Palgrave Macmillan), co-edited with John Drummond. He is Editor of the Journal of Philosophy of Education.

Judith Suissa is Senior Lecturer in Philosophy of Education at the Institute of Education. Her research interests include radical and libertarian educational theory; liberal theory; well-being, and philosophical aspects of parenting and childhood. Her book Anarchism and Education; A Philosophical Perspective, was published by Routledge in 2006.

Mitsutoshi Takayanagi is Assistant Professor at the Faculty of Education, Shinshu University. He used to be appointed to the position of Research Fellow of the Japan Society for the Promotion of Science from April 2008 to January 2010. His academic interests are in Stanley Cavell's Emersonian Moral Perfectionism and teacher education. He is the author of 'Transforming the Profession of Teaching in a Changing Society: Teaching as Philosophical Inquiry and Stanley Cavell's The Senses of Walden', Educational Studies in Japan, 2, pp. 95-105.

Chie Takekoshi is a doctoral student at the Graduate School of Education, Kyoto University. Her main scholarly interest is in comparative education, including such themes as tutorials in British and Australian higher education and seminars in German and Japanese higher education.

Atsuko Tsuji is a graduate student at The Graduate School of Education, Kyoto University, who studied for nine months in 2007-2008 at the Institute of Education. Her main research interest is in the work of Walter Benjamin, especially his concept of experience and language.

Ellen Wu is a PhD student at the Institute of Education. Her research interests are in progressive (child-centred) education.
