Dear Pan-editors and readers,

The website for the Ecovolunteer Program offers many wildlife conservation and research projects all over the world. The projects involve many different species: monk seals, wolves, griffon vultures, black rhinos, white rhinos, colobus monkeys, bush babies, gibbons, several species of macaques, bats, macaws, marine turtles, dolphins, whales, etc. The projects are available for direct participation by students and holidaymakers. The website offers separate pages of information about each project and additionally the opportunity to freely download extensive files on each project and species. All projects are operated by local conservation and research organizations and the costs for participation are minimal.

So please have a look at:

Or specifically for the chimpanzee-project:
