To T. N., my honorable friend

*Looking back in time, I smile
To have a friend such as you
Sets my mind at rest
Divided though we may be
By the limitless ocean*

Table of Contents

Prologue 1

Chapter 1 Making History with Hormones 6

1. Dawn in a foreign country 6
2. Steady progress 10
3. Aiming for commercialization 12

Chapter 2 The Quest to Unravel the Mystery of the Adrenal Glands 18

1. Searching in the dark 18
2. The steady advance of anatomy and embryology 21
3. Addison's disease 24
4. What happens if the adrenal glands are removed? 25

Chapter 3 The Search for Physiological Functions 30

1. Submissions to Montesquieu's Essay Competition 30
2. The dawn of physiology 32
3. Vulpian's keen insight 35
4. Meanwhile, in other countries 38
5. Why was Vulpian doing this research? 39
6. Vulpian's many friendships 41
7. Courageous human experiments 43
8. Professor Schäfer's astonishment 47
9. The anguish of a minor language 50
10. Looking back over research into the functions of the suprarenal glands 52
11. Hemostatic effect and treatment of hay fever and asthma 55

Chapter 4 In Pursuit of the Active Principles 62

1. Physiological curiosity 62
2. Painstaking explorations by chemists 66
3. The climax of the isolation race 69
4. The war of words between American, British, and German researchers 74
5. Success at Last 75
6. The gentleman of Parke, Davis & Co. 79
7. Reaction to the crystallization 81
8. Abel refuses to give up 86
9. Lack of a group to determine activity 87

Chapter 5 Good Fortune 93

1. Takamine's first turning point 93
2. Takamine's second turning point 97
3. Fighting back with a new idea 100
